Understanding why we have a certain credit score requires knowledge of several factors, including payment history, amount owed, length of credit history, new accounts opened, and types of credit used. According to Money Magazine, the average credit score for adults aged 18-29 in the U.S. is 652, which is considered to be in the “fair” range. Most Americans don’t enter the “good” range until they are aged 50-59 years old, with an average credit score of 709.
