Only one percent of the population has an INFJ Personality Type, making it the most rare of all the types. INFJs place great importance on having things orderly and systematic in their outer world. They put a lot of energy into identifying the best system for getting things done, and constantly define and re-define the priorities in their lives.

Both the INFJ and INFP personality types run into the problem of feeling misunderstood. For INFJs, the Perspectives process gives them an insight into other people that is unmatched, and it can be disconcerting to realize other people don't have the same super power. The result is a lot of one-sided relationships.

In actuality, the INFJ and INFP have no personality functions (Ni, Fe, etc.) in common. However, their sharing of three preferences (i.e., I, N, F) often leads to an alignment of values between these two types. Speaking from personal experience, some of my nearest and dearest friends have been INFP types.
